by Peter Slatin

SESSION I: What is Disability ?

This session will define disability, who is disabled and the current relationship between people with disabilities and society at large.

We will explore disability and intersectionality in relation to the Diversity, Equity and Inclusion movement and the crossover between disability and age, or ageism and ableism.

SESSION II: What is Accessibility ?

This session will take a deep dive into the three Foundations of accessibility: Physical/Environmental; Digital; and Social.

We will discuss how the Americans with Disabilities Act addresses and regulates accessibility, and explore how to make ADA compliance the floor rather than the ceiling of accessibility programming.

We will discuss how to develop and maintain an accessibility information network.

SESSION III: Internal Relations to Disability & Accessibility

This session will explore steps to creating Disability Equity and inclusion from Human Resources strategies to internal communications.

SESSION V: External Relations and Accessibility ?

This session will discuss how your organization can help stakeholders and members develop and implement accessibility policies and practices, including training and marketing.

We will develop strategies to weave accessibility awareness and training, and to integrate these with standing onboarding and support programs.

We will discuss how stakeholders and members can participate in developing and maintaining the Accessibility Information Network mentioned above.

We will also offer strategies for helping members address gaps in their accessibility programs during and before remediation.

An aerial photograph of New York City at sunrise. The sun is low on the horizon, casting a warm glow over the city. In the foreground, Central Park is visible with its dense green trees. To the right, a dense cluster of skyscrapers rises into the sky. A large billboard on one of the buildings displays the word 'WILDFOX' and the time '6:45 AM' with a temperature of '42°F'. The overall scene is a mix of nature and urban architecture.
